SHAKAROOOTH

STUDENT MINISTRIES

October 2011

The summer heat is officially, hopefully, gone! Now we get to look forward to cooler days and changing leaves. My prayer is that we will see our youth growing closer to their God this fall.

I believe that our youth are starting to 'catch fire' for God and His word, which is something that we have been putting extra emphasis on in the past few months. Please continue to encourage this at home and set a great example of what Bible study looks like for a believer.

We had a great time at the fellowship at our house in September as we discussed the importance of a church family. I don't know where I would be if it weren't for the Body of Christ, His Church.

Wednesday, October 12th, we will be taking the youth group to Huck's Corn Maze in Lowell. The cost is $4 per student, plus there will be concessions and other things that you may want to send a few extra dollars. We will be leaving the church at 6:00, so they will need to be at church early that Wednesday. We will be back by 8:00. This will be a fun night of fellowship for our youth and I encourage them to invite friends as well.

Have a great October and we are looking forward to God doing some great things this fall!

WATCH YOUR WORDS! HELP KIDS STAND UP AGAINST PROFANITY

Compared to other sins, cursing might seem tame. But Scripture takes a strong stand against sins of the tongue. God makes it clear that obscenities and impurities have no place coming out of the mouths of Christ-followers. Unfortunately, Christian kids often struggle just as much with their words as their unchurched peers do. Infractions range from the ubiquitous and casual use of the f-word to rude, suggestive, and vicious references about other people. “Profane” means “to treat something sacred with abuse, irreverence, or contempt.” So when kids use the f-word, they treat something sacred (the act of intercourse) with contempt. Try these approaches to tackle profanity:

- Ask kids to keep a running tally of the number of profanities they hear during one day at school or one night of TV-watching. Have them report back; then ask them if they were surprised by what they learned.
- Tell kids the truth. Research shows that people who curse are respected less in our society and have fewer deep relationships. Cursing also can cause other people to stumble and violates our calling to love our neighbors as ourselves.
- Challenge kids to use only “prayer” words. If they wouldn’t use the word in conversation with God, then it isn’t appropriate in any other context. Give kids alternative attention-grabbing words that can substitute for profanity.

THE VIEW

- When Gallup researchers asked 13- to 17-year-olds to rank a long list of “serious behaviors,” kids said using profanity in public was the least serious offense of all.
- The Center for Media and Public Affairs found that profanity is used every six minutes on network TV shows, every three minutes in movies, and every two minutes on premium cable shows.
- To combat high-tech gossip, some schools are punishing students for what they post on the Internet after school hours.

TIPS >>>

Media editor and screenwriter Bryan Belknap offers these insights into language:

- Cursing is akin to unbelief because it denies Jesus’ presence in all things, at all times. Why is speech that’s unacceptable for Jesus okay for us?
- It’s impossible to unconditionally love someone using foul language. Cursing does nothing to communicate grace.
- Cursing violates the spirit of humility. Words are a barometer of character and can show an unwillingness to submit to authority.

Cursing undermines integrity. When kids use swear words in certain situations but not others, they’re teaching themselves to play fast-and-loose with their morals.

- The broader culture still labels foul-talkers as ill-educated, uncreative, and lacking in self-control. Initial impressions of people who cuss don’t include happiness, intelligence, or Christianity.
- Clean language is the ultimate counterculture rebellion. Even a 2-year-old can say potty words. The world notices and respects people who refrain from using profanity. All kids want to stand out from the crowd and carve their own path as unique individuals. Clean speech is one way to do it. In fact, pure language might become the new cool.

PONDER THIS

- What do your own words say about your character, your values, and your relationship with God?
- What sins of the tongue are the most challenging for you? for your teenagers?
- How might your family members be able to hold one another accountable for how they speak?

Expert Insights for Parents of Teenagers

By Jasper Rains

At SimplyYouthMinistry.com, Jasper Rains offers suggestions for ways that adults can use their words wisely, especially in tricky situations:

Clear the air. People-pleasers don’t want to rock the boat. This is a major way the enemy gets a foothold in relationships. We tend to bottle up our anger until we blow. If you don’t lovingly confront an issue right away, it will only fuel anger until you confront in frustration.

Often, things that eventually become major issues start with bad communication and continue to build. Put concerns on the table as soon as they happen. That clears up misunderstandings and opens the door to speedy reconciliation.

Speak less. This may seem like a contradiction to the first point, but sometimes when we’re stressed we tend to be too confrontational. We want to put people in their place. We often end up in arguments that only contribute to the problem and don’t preemptively lead us to healing.

Sometimes the best thing to say is nothing at all. Prayerfully seek when it’s right to confront and when it’s right to be silent.

Stop gossiping. Even if you dress something up as a “prayer request,” talking to others about a frustrating situation shouldn’t be your only step. Instead, go to the source of the issue rather than speaking behind other people’s backs.

A good rule is to share frustrations with only one person, such as an accountability partner. This will help you release some steam but will also give an opportunity for this person to hold you accountable to making things right while they pray for the situation as a whole.

BIBLE FOCUS

The tongue is a small thing that makes grand speeches. But a tiny spark can set a great forest on fire. And the tongue is a flame of fire. It is a whole world of wickedness, corrupting your entire body. It can set your whole life on fire, for it is set on fire by hell itself.

James 3:5-6
